The swan is a large water bird. It belongs to the same family as geese and ducks. It is white but it can also be black and white or completely black. Swans have a very long neck. They feed both in water and on land and they mostly eat plants and sometimes insects.

They usually stay with their partner for life. They lay between 3 - 8 eggs. Baby swans learn to fly after a few months. Swans can fly well but they need a lot of space on water to take off. Some species migrate. Swans may live for as long as 35 years. They are famous for their graceful movement and they appear in many poems and tales.
